DECISION AND ORDERS

BY MEMBERS BROWN, COHEN, AND TRUESDALE

On February 14, 1995, Administrative Law Judge Clifford H. Anderson issued the attached Order Granting Motion Severing Case 21-CA-30299 and Decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. On March 21, 1995, Judge Anderson issued the attached decision in Case 21-CA-30299. The Respondent filed exceptions in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and a supporting brief. The General Counsel filed limited exceptions in Case 21-CA-30299 and a supporting brief.¹

The National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the decision and the record in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to grant the General Counsel's limited exceptions in Case 21-CA-30299 in their entirety. In all other respects, we affirm the judge's rulings, findings,² ¹The Respondent reinstated employees Larry Taylor, Tommie Nunez, and Fred Williamson pursuant to a Federal district court order in the Sec. 10(j) proceeding in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. The Respondent then discharged them shortly thereafter. The General Counsel alleged in Case 21-CA-30299 that these discharges violated Sec. 8(a)(5), (3), and (1) of the Act. The judge dismissed the complaint. There were no exceptions filed to the judge's dismissal of these complaint allegations. The General Counsel's limited exceptions requested that the Board make the judge's "conditional" findings "unconditional" and that we adopt these findings in connection with the compliance stage of Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and that Case 21-CA-30299 be reconsolidated with Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. The Respondent filed no opposition to the General Counsel's limited exceptions.

²The Respondent has excepted to some of the judge's credibility findings. The Board's established policy is not to overrule an administrative law judge's credibility resolutions unless the clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence convinces us that they are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing the findings.

and conclusions³ and adopt the judge's recommended Orders.⁴

ORDER RECONSOLIDATING CASES

The National Labor Relations Board orders the reconsolidation of Case 21-CA-30299 with Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003.

ORDER

The National Labor Relations Board adopts the recommended orders of the administrative law judge. In Case 21-CA-30299, the complaint is dismissed. The judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions, however, are reconsolidated with the judge's rulings, findings, and conclusions in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. In Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 the National Labor Relations Board orders that the Respondent, New Breed Leasing Corporation, Compton, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the Order as modified.

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(a).

"(a) Subject to the limitation set forth in the Board's decision, offer, in writing, immediate and full reinstatement to all of the former Maersk unit employees to the positions they held with the predecessor, discharging as necessary employees in the units not previously employed in the predecessor units or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed while working for its predecessor, and make them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them. With the written reinstatement offers, Respondent shall notify these individuals in writing that it will recognize and bargain with the Unions as their exclusive representative."

³The judge found that but for the Respondent's desire to avoid being bound as a successor, the Respondent would have hired all of the former Maersk unit employees. These employees would have comprised all of Respondent's unit employees. In these circumstances, the Board finds that, but for Respondent's unlawful motive, Respondent would have had a "plan to retain all" of the Maersk unit employees. Love's Barbeque Restaurant, 245 NLRB 78, 82 (1979), enfd. in relevant part sub nom. Kallmann v. NLRB, 640 F.2d 1094 (9th Cir. 1981). Therefore the Respondent was not free to change the prevailing terms and conditions of employment unilaterally.

⁴Although the Respondent has offered reinstatement to employees Larry Taylor, Tommie Nunez, and Fred Williamson, pursuant to a Federal district court order in an action brought under Sec. 10(j) of the Act, that offer was not sufficient to qualify as a valid offer of reinstatement as required by our order in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30002. Thus, Taylor, Nunez, and Williamson are subject to the same affirmative remedies as all of the former Maersk unit employees. We further note, however, that we leave to compliance the issue of how many discriminatees will be entitled to reinstatement and backpay. See Laro Maintenance Corp., 312 NLRB 155 fn. 3 (1993). Accordingly, we shall modify the judge's recommended Order to make clear that the reinstatement and make-whole provisions are subject to this limitation.

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the administrative law judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Board has found that we violated the National Labor Relations Act and has ordered us to post and abide by this notice.

Section 7 of the Act gives employees these rights.

- To organize
- To form, join, or assist any union
- To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
- To act together for other mutual aid or protection
- To choose not to engage in any of these protected concerted activities.

The National Labor Relations Act holds that an employer who employs a majority of employees from a bargaining unit employed by the former employer whose operations the new employer takes over must recognize and bargain with the labor organization that represented the predecessor's unit employees.

The Act further holds that an employer may not refuse to hire a predecessor's employees because it wishes to avoid recognizing and bargaining with a labor organization.

When New Breed Leasing Corporation took over the operations of Maersk Pacific at the 1412 Army Command in April 1994, it improperly failed to hire the unit employees of Maersk. Had it hired those employees, a substantial majority of its employees in the units described below would have come from the predecessor units. Accordingly, New Breed Leasing Corporation from the very beginning of its operations on April 1, 1994, was obligated to recognize and bargain with the following labor organizations as the exclusive representatives of the following units of employees.

The following unit of New Breed Leasing Corporation's longshoremen and marine clerks employed at the Army Terminal is represented by International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 13 (Local 13) and International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 63 (Local 63):

All longshoremen and marine clerks employed by Respondent at 1312 Medium Post Command located at 1620 South Wilmington, Compton, California, excluding all other employees, professional employees, management employees, temporary management employees, trainees, confidential employees, salesmen, guards, watchmen, and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

The following unit of New Breed Leasing Corporation's office clerical employees employed at the Army Terminal is represented by the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 63, Office Clerical Unit:

All office clerical employees employed by Respondent at 1312 Medium Post Command located at 1620 South Wilmington, Compton, California, excluding all other employees, professional employees, management employees, temporary management employees, trainees, confidential employees, salesmen, guards, watchmen, and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

Given all these facts, we give you the following assurances:

WE WILL NOT fail and refuse to hire employees of the predecessor employer, Maersk Pacific, in order to avoid becoming obligated to recognize and bargain with the Unions as representatives of our unit employees.

WE WILL NOT refuse to recognize and bargain in good faith with the Unions as the exclusive representatives of the employees in the bargaining units set forth in this notice to employees.

WE WILL NOT unilaterally set terms and conditions of employment for bargaining unit employees and thereafter unilaterally change those terms and conditions of employment without notifying the Unions or providing them an opportunity to bargain respecting proposed changes.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees and or employee applicants in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, subject to the limitation set forth in the Board's decision, offer in writing immediate and full reinstatement to all former Maersk unit employees to the same positions they held with the predecessor, terminating if necessary any non-Maersk employees or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed while working for the predecessor, and WE WILL make them whole, with interest, for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them. With our written reinstatement offers WE WILL notify these individuals in writing that we will recognize and bargain with the Unions as their exclusive representatives.

WE WILL remove from our files any reference to our unlawful refusal to hire the former Maersk unit employees and WE WILL notify these employees in writing that this has been done and that this unlawful conduct will not be used against them in any way.

WE WILL, on request, bargain with the Unions as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate bargaining units concerning terms and conditions of employment and, if understandings are reached, WE WILL embody such understandings in signed agreements.

WE WILL on request of the Unions, restore the status quo ante and rescind the unilateral changes in the unit employees' wages, hours, and working conditions that we implemented in the hiring of unit employees in March 1994 and all changes made thereafter, and make affected employees, including those whose employment is directed above, whole for any and all losses they incurred by virtue of the unilateral changes to their wages, fringe benefits, and other terms and conditions of employment from the initial hire of unit employees in March 1994 and thereafter, until Respondent negotiates in good faith with the Unions to agreement or to impasse, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

WE WILL preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records and other records and documents necessary to analyze the amount of backpay and other moneys due under the terms of this Order and to insure that the terms of this Order have been fully complied with.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION SEVERING CASE 21-CA-30299 AND DECISION IN CASES 21-CA- 29995 AND 21-CA-30003

CLIFFORD H. ANDERSON, Administrative Law Judge. I heard the issues raised by the complaint in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 in trial on September 26 through 29, 1994, in Los Angeles, California. A separate hearing on the allegations of the complaint in Case 21-CA-30299 was held in Los Angeles, California, on January 30, 1995. Posthearing briefs respecting the complaint in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 were submitted on November 10, 1994. Posthearing briefs respecting the complaint in Case 21-CA-30299 are due on March 7, 1995. The cases arose as follows.

On April 4, 1994, the International Longshoreman's and Warehousemen's Union (ILWU), International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 13 (Local 13), and International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 63 (Local 63) filed a charge with Region 21 of the National Labor Relations Board (the Board) docketed as Case 21-CA-29995 against New Breed Leasing Corporation (Respondent or the Employer). On April 19, 1993, the ILWU and Locals 13 and 63 amended their charge. On April 7, 1994, the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 63, Office Clerical Unit (Local 63 OCU) and collectively with the ILWU, Local 13, and Local 63, as the Unions or the Charging Parties) filed a charge with Region 21 docketed as Case 21-CA-30003 against Respondent.

On May 27, 1994, the Regional Director for Region 21 issued an order consolidating cases, consolidated complaint, and notice of hearing consolidating Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. Respondent filed an answer to the consolidated complaint dated June 10, 1994. The complaint and the answer were each further amended at the September 26, 1994 hearing.

The complaint respecting the two cases alleges and the answer denies that Respondent is a successor employer with respect to two bargaining units represented by the Unions and that Respondent wrongfully failed and refused to hire the predecessor employer's unit employees in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act. The complaint further alleges, and the answer denies, that Respondent had a bargaining obligation with respect to employees in the two units and violated its duty to recognize and bargain with the Union in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act in the following ways: (1) by failing to recognize and bargain with the Unions as representatives of its unit employees; (2) in initially establishing its unit employees' terms and conditions of employment without bargaining with the Unions; and (3) by failing to bargain with the Unions respecting changes from the predecessor's terms and conditions of employment.

On September 30, 1994, the Unions filed a charge docketed as Case 21-CA-30299 against Respondent and amended the charge on December 14, 1994. On November 25, 1994, the Regional Director for Region 21 issued a complaint respecting Case 21-CA-30299 (the latter complaint). The latter complaint alleges essentially the same violations of the Act as the complaint respecting Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 (the earlier complaint) with the additional allegations here summarized that Respondent terminated three employees in late September and early October 1994 because of their union activities in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act and changed work rules of unit employees without bargaining with the Unions in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

On December 12, 1994, the General Counsel filed a motion to consolidate the latter complaint with the case then pending decision in the former complaint case. I granted the motion by order dated January 3, 1995. The hearing on the latter complaint was held on January 30, 1995. Posthearing briefs in Case 21-CA-30299, as of the time of the issuance of this decision, were due on March 7, 1995.

Severance of Cases

The parties have consistently indicated their strong desire that the decision on the complaint in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, if at all possible, not be delayed by the consolidation of the complaints. Counsel for Charging Parties Local 63 and OCU moved at the hearing in Case 21-CA-30299 to sever that case from Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 in order to expedite issuance of the former decision. The other parties did not object.

I have determined that it will avoid unnecessary delay and effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act to sever Case 21-CA-30299 from Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and decide the former cases herein retaining the record with respect to Case 21-CA-30299 for further consideration and subsequent issuance of decision.

The Board has affirmed cases in which administrative law judges have severed cases during or after the evidentiary record has been concluded. See, e.g., Money Radio, 297 NLRB 698 (1990), and Money Radio, 297 NLRB 705 (1990). Indeed, the Board has granted motions to sever cases even after the issuance of an administrative law judge decision on a consolidated matter. Storer Cable TV of Texas, 292 NLRB 140 (1988). I shall therefore grant the motion to sever below and will not further address Case 21-CA-30299 herein.

Respecting Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003

On the entire record concerning Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003,¹ including helpful briefs from the General Counsel, the Charging Parties, and Respondent respecting those cases, I make the following²

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

At all times since April 1, 1994, Respondent,³ a New York corporation with an office and place of business in Compton, California, has been engaged in the operation of a container freight station providing warehousing and interstate and foreign shipment of cargo pursuant to a contract with the United States Army respecting its 1312 Medium Port Command (the army terminal). Based on a projection of its operations, Respondent's business operation of the termi-

The record in Case 21-CA-30299 shall include all aspects of the record in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 including the instant decision.

² When not otherwise noted, the findings are based on the pleadings, the stipulations of counsel, or unchallenged credible evidence.

³ Although there was some discussion and dispute respecting the existence of a separate corporate entity operating the terminal, see for example Respondent's original answer, the parties agreed to deal exclusively with Respondent as the sole legal entity whose actions were in contest and amended their pleadings accordingly. Consistent with the pleadings and the manner in which the case was litigated, no findings are made with respect to any other entity acting as a subsidiary of or agent for Respondent in operating the terminal at relevant times.

nal will annually derive revenues in excess of $50,000 for the warehousing and transportation of freight in interstate and foreign commerce, under arrangements with various common carriers, each of which operates between California and various other States of the United States or between California and foreign countries.

Based on the above I find that Respondent at all times material has been an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

The complaint alleges, the answer admits, and I find the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (the ILWU), the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 13 (Local 13), the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 63 (Local 63 and, together with the ILWU and Local 13, the Longshore Unions), and International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 63, Office Clerical Unit (Local OCU and, together with the ILWU Local 13 and Local 63, the Unions), and each of them, are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

1. The army terminal

For many years the United States Army Military Traffic Management Command through its 1312 Medium Port Command has maintained a container freight station and privately owned vehicle processing facility at 1620 Wilmington Avenue, Compton, California (the army terminal or the facility), for the purpose of consolidation and transshipment of Department of Defense service personnel's household goods, general cargo, and privately owned vehicles in Southern California. The Army for many years has contracted out the operation of the facility to private stevedoring contractors. Each of these contractors for many years until the events in question had recognized and bargained with the Longshore Unions respecting the longshore and marine clerks unit and with Local OCU respecting the office clerical employee.

For 3 years until March 31, 1994, Maersk Pacific Limited (Maersk) operated the army terminal pursuant to a contract with the Army. Maersk at relevant times was a member of the Pacific Maritime Association (PMA), an organization of employers in the maritime industry. Maersk's army terminal employees were at all relevant times represented by locals of the ILWU.⁴ As a member of the PMA, Maersk was bound to a collective-bargaining agreement with the Longshore Unions extending through July 1, 1996, respecting the following West Coast multiemployer bargaining unit (longshoremen and marine clerk's unit):

All longshoremen and marine clerks employed by members of PMA and the employers who have authorized PMA to bargain on their behalf, including Maersk.

⁴ A local of the ILWU that represents statutory supervisors also represented one of Maersk's employees, Foreman Rick Ponce.

On the same basis Maersk was bound to an agreement with Local OCU through June 30, 1995, respecting the following unit (the office clerical unit or OCU):

All office clerical employees employed at 1312 Medium Post Command located at 1620 South Wilmington, Compton, California, excluding all other employees, professional employees, management employees, temporary management employees, trainees, confidential employees, salesmen, guards, watchmen, and supervisors as defined in the Labor Management Relations Act.

In the year to March 31, 1994, Maersk's army terminal longshoremen and marine clerk's unit contained approximately eight employees and its office clerical unit contained approximately four employees.

Each of the units described above has been at all relevant times appropriate within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act. Based on the record as a whole and the contracts in evidence, I find: (1) that at relevant times through March 31, 1994, the longshore locals were the exclusive representatives for purposes of collective bargaining of Maersk's longshoremen and marine clerk's unit employees and (2) that at relevant times through March 31, 1994, Local OCU was the exclusive representative for purposes of collective bargaining of Maersk's office clerical unit.

2. The Pacific Maritime Association

The Pacific Maritime Association (PMA) is an association of employers who have recognized the ILWU and its various locals as the representative of their employees engaged in the longshore industry on the West Coast of the United States. The Association negotiates and administers collective-bargaining agreements on behalf of its members as well as supplies related administrative and industrial relations support.

3. Respondent

Respondent is a corporation with headquarters in Greensboro, North Carolina. It operates facilities under contract with the government and others in various States of the United States. Louis DeJoy is the chief executive officer (CEO). Dennis Hunt is the manager of accounting and administration. William Lee is a consultant of Respondent regularly involved in Respondent's commencement of new operations. The agency of these individuals was not in contest.

B. Events⁵

1. Respondent's activities respecting the 1994 bid to operate the army terminal

Maersk Pacific Limited's contract to operate the army terminal was to expire on March 31, 1994. Respondent, Maersk, and others submitted bids to operate the facility thereafter for a 2-year period commencing on April 1, 1994, ⁵Material conflicts in significant testimony are noted. When there is no essential difference in the testimony of witnesses regarding material events or when there is no conflict between witnesses or relevance to differing timing or versions of events, events are recited without evidentiary attribution. Unchallenged business records and other documents in evidence have provided substantial aid in establishing the timing of events.

with a 3-year option reserved to the government. Respondent's bid was dated January 24, 1994. It noted in part:

Conversations have been initiated and provision made to work with the Pacific Maritime Association (PMA) to obtain both long-term and occasional workers. Membership in PMA assures the experience level of the work force and simplifies personnel administration. For long-term employees, a selection process will begin not later than March 15. These opportunities can be posted and selection conducted under PMA auspices to ensure employees of known skill levels.

The New Breed site manager will be a participant on the implementation team. Supervisors will be selected and will begin training by March 21st and workers by March 28th. If existing employees are retained, they will be working already, and any added training will take place as soon as possible.

As the quoted portion of the bid noted, Respondent had initiated telephonic inquiries of PMA earlier in January 1994 and had as a result received a communication from PMA dated January 19, 1994, which included membership applications, booklets of association bylaws, and "copies of the current longshore, clerk, and forman agreements, by which you will be bound upon acceptance into [PMA] membership." There were apparently financial advantages to Respondent if it joined PMA sooner rather than later. Accordingly, on or about February 22, 1994, Respondent mailed to PMA a completed membership application and check for $1000 in payment of the required application fee.

By letter dated March 9, 1994, the PMA informed Respondent that its application for membership had been accepted by the PMA board of directors. The letter continued:

In order to complete your membership, it is necessary for an officer of your company to affix his or her signature on the Bylaws of the Association. For this purpose two blank letter agreements are enclosed, one of which should be completed and returned to this office.

The PMA followed on March 11, 1994, with an additional letter detailing Respondent's financial obligations of membership and reporting and payroll procedures. Respondent did not at any time return the signed letter agreement.

Respondent's bid for the army terminal contract was favorably received.⁶ On or about March 8, 1994, Respondent was advised by telephone that it had been awarded the contract. By March 15, 1994, the documents establishing its award of the contract had been physically received by Respondent.

2. Respondent's actions in preparing to assume army terminal operations

On or soon before Thursday, March 17, 1994, CEO LeJoy sent Hunt and Lee to Compton to commence Respondent's onsite transition efforts. Hunt and Lee arrived in Compton, California, on the March 17 and held a postaward conference with Lt. Colonel Dennis Faver, the commanding officer of the Army's 1312 Medium Port Command, and his staff. In the meeting the contract and the planned transition from Maersk to Respondent on April 1, 1994, were discussed. Colonel Faver testified that in that meeting:

⁶Maersk's bid was rejected by the military due to a technical deficiency.

I don't know who initiated it, but it did come up, as to what was going to be the future of the current work force. And one of the New Breed individuals said, "We haven't made a decision yet. We are keeping all of our options open."

With a day or two Hunt and Lee went to the local PMA headquarters and met with PMA Southern California representative Vince LaMaestra. Respondent's responsibilities and obligations under the collective-bargaining agreements as well as the existing state of industrial relations generally at the army terminal and the PMA's role in assisting Respondent in such areas were discussed. At one point LaMaestra brought ILWU Local 13 Secretary Treasurer Norman Tuck and another ILWU representative into the meeting and briefly introduced Hunt and Lee to the others as representatives of a "new member of PMA."

Hunt testified that he also arranged through Lee to place blind employment advertisements in the local paper—which ads were to appear the following week on March 23 or 24—and to look for a place in which Respondent's staff could interview job candidates responding to the ads.

James Moynihan testified CEO LeJoy contacted him at his New Jersey home on the evening of March 17 and informed him that Respondent had been awarded the army terminal contract and, as earlier proposed, Moynihan would be Respondent's Compton operations manager. Moynihan testified that LeJoy discussed with him the specifics of his new position, but also told him that "there were decisions yet to be made involving labor, and I was not involved. . . . At that time I didn't know exactly what the hiring process would be." Moynihan testified that he had further conversation by telephone with LeJoy on the evening of Saturday, March 19, respecting the operational needs of the Compton facility and the types of people needed. The next day, Sunday, March 20, Moynihan flew to Compton from New Jersey.

On Monday, March 21, Moynihan plunged into the operational aspects of the assumption of operations such as making leasing arrangements for necessary equipment. He testified that in the early part of the week he had no involvement in the recruitment process that was in the hands of two additional staff, John O'Neil and Ed Campbell. It was their task to contact and screen the applicants who would respond to Respondent's newspaper advertisements appearing on and after March 23 or 24.

Moynihan and Lee went to the offices of ILWU Local OCU's offices on March 21 for a meeting with Jerry Rich and Ibarra. The army terminal operation was discussed as well as the then current collective-bargaining agreements with Maersk. Rich testified that the New Breed agents explicitly indicated that they were going to retain the Maersk staff asserting, "they needed the people . . . the experienced people." Lee specifically denied any such intention had been expressed and Moynihan testified had no recollection of such statements ever being made. Moynihan testified, however, that at the meeting it was clear that the union representatives assumed that Respondent would sign the then current collective-bargaining agreements and further assumed that Respondent would retain the existing Maersk unit employees.

During this period, Respondent's employee Michael Woods was at the facility documenting Maersk's work procedures and attempting to learn the duties and responsibilities of various Maersk unit employees. In so doing he had conversations with various of the unit employees. Maersk employee Kevin Reilly testified that Woods discussed his job with him and he specifically asked Woods if Respondent was planning on replacing the Maersk employees. He testified that Woods told him that Respondent was not going to replace the current employees. Woods specifically denied both that he was ever asked such a question by Maersk employees or that he assured any Maersk employee of a job with Respondent. Maersk employee Linda Kennedy recalled that Woods, on learning that she was the only employee who could issue a necessary certification as part of the army terminal operations, asserted, "Well, I guess in the future we better make sure you don't get sick."

Maersk employee Bernis Gald testified that she had received a local county court subpoena in January requiring her appearance for jury duty on April 5, 1994. She testified she assumed as an employee who would be employed by Respondent that she needed to be at work during the transition from Maersk operations to Respondent's operations and therefore she raised the matter of the subpoena that required her appearance at court during the critical week of April 5 with both Lee and later Moynihan. She testified she requested that Respondent provide directly to the court, or to her for retransmission to the court, a letter of explanation that would allow her to postpone her jury service so that she would not be absent in the first days of Respondent's assumption of operations. She testified that Lee told her it was important for all the workers to be present during the transition, but that since he was not going to be at the facility at relevant times, Moynihan would take care of the matter. Lee testified he did not recall a Maersk employee named Gald and did not recall ever being approached by anyone regarding a summons for jury service.

Gald testified that after speaking to Lee she spoke to Moynihan repeating what she had said to Lee and telling Moynihan she would make him a copy of the subpoena so he would have all the information necessary to take care of the matter. She testified that Moynihan said that would be fine and that he would pick up the subpoena from her later. Moynihan testified that Gald did in fact speak to him as she testified, but that he simply told her in response that "I didn't know what she thought my involvement in that would be and that I couldn't help her."

Gald testified that after her conversation with Moynihan she made a copy of the subpoena. She looked for Moynihan on several occasions over the next day or two, but he was not at the facility. Because she was off on Friday, March 25, 1994, on Thursday, March 24, she left the subpoena with fellow employee Linda Kennedy asking her to give it to him that Friday.

On Wednesday and Thursday, March 23 and 24, 1994, Respondent's blind advertisements seeking job applicants ran in the local papers. Applications responded over the next 2 or 3 days. Respondent's agents Campbell and O'Neil screened the replies, selected promising individuals, and interviewed selected applicants at a local hotel. While these two made initial screenings, Hunt and DeJoy also looked at some of the submitted applicant resumes.

On Thursday evening, March 24, following the conclusion of what he described had been a very busy day, Moynihan left his hotel and went to a nearby bar. There he had a conversation with a Maersk employee, Eric Gonzales. The specifics of the conversation are in very substantial dispute. Gonzales testified that while the conversation was social and convivial he turned it to work matters. He testified that he asked Moynihan about Respondent's intentions regarding retaining Maersk employees. Gonzales testified that Moynihan told him that Respondent was going to "go with the Local 13 work force." He recalled Moynihan said, "Yes. I don't see any problem with the present work force there, that it is going to stay status quo." Gonzales testified that he identified specific employees of Maersk and told Moynihan of their concerns regarding their jobs such as Linda Kennedy. He recalled that Moynihan responded to his statements about Kennedy: "Oh. Linda is a very good worker, and I wouldn't want Linda to be upset. I should probably talk to her and let her know that her job wasn't going to be lost." Gonzales testified that Moynihan in turn asked questions of him respecting work arrangements of particular employees including Forman Ricky Ponce and that Gonzales explained what he could.

Moynihan recalled meeting Gonzales at the bar. He testified, however, that when Gonzales sought to introduce work matters into their conversation Moynihan protested saying he did not want to discuss work issues, Moynihan recalled the conversation was simply social and brief. He specifically denied that any work related conversation occurred or that he made the statements attributed to him by Gonzales.

Gonzales, corroborated by the testimony of Maersk employees Linda Kennedy, Kevin Reilly, and Rick Ponce testified that on the morning of Friday, March 25, at work, he related the substance his prior evening's conversation with Moynihan to Kennedy, Ponce, and all the clerical workers and marine clerks at work that day. In effect Gonzales told them not to worry about their jobs because Moynihan had told him Respondent was going to retain the Maersk staff. Gonzales testified that all the Maersk employees were concerned about their jobs because Respondent had made no announcement about whether they would be retaining the current work force and the changeover from Maersk to Respondent's operation of the army terminal was to occur the following week.

That same day, Friday, March 25, in Moynihan's recollection, Kennedy put a copy of Gald's subpoena on his desk. Moynihan denied knowing its purpose or taking any action respecting it. Kennedy testified that Moynihan took the subpoena from her and told her that he would be speaking to somebody "back east" about it.

Moynihan met with Colonel Faver on Friday. Colonel Faver testified that he asked what the intentions of Respondent were respecting the Maersk work force. He recalled that Moynihan told him that the decision on the work force would be made over the weekend by someone at headquarters—not him. Moynihan also recalled the conversation and the question from the Colonel. He agreed that he told the Colonel that he did not have an answer about the Maersk employees because the decision had not been made on how to staff the facility. Moynihan testified, however, that at the time of this Friday workday conversation, he was aware that the following morning he was to begin personally giving interviews to job applicants screened by other Respondent staff from those who had responded to the newspaper ads.

A second conversation took place between Moynihan and Gonzales that is in dispute. Gonzales testified that he met Moynihan at the same bar on Friday evening:

Jim came to the bar, and we both sat down there. And we were both having a drink, and he said, "I have got some bad news to tell you." I said, "Well, what is the bad news?" And he goes, "Well, I heard from the people up on top that I had no right to probably tell you anything about labor, that my job now was just to run the facility after it was set up."

So, I said, "Wow, why this sudden change?" He said, "Well, to tell you the truth, I thought that I was going to be in charge of all the hiring, and my superiors are now telling me not to worry about the hiring, not to worry about the work force, that I had nothing to do with that." He goes, "I am going to be honest with you. I am really upset. I thought that I was going to have a lot more power than just the operating. I thought I was going to do the hiring or I would at least have a say so."

And he said, "So, as of this conversation, if you see me walking around the warehouse and I don't talk to you, I don't have anything to tell you. So, you might as well look at it like if I am just not talking to you, it is not that I am doing it intentionally. And you might think that one day we could be friends or you might look at me as an asshole."

And I said, "Well, if that is the way you look at it." I was pretty upset and left it at that. I didn't really have anything else to say to him because he sort of laid it out flat, and I accepted it and left it at that.

Moynihan recalled the conversation but testified that Gonzales initially seemed to be approaching him as a spokesman for Rick Ponce respecting Ponce's work arrangements and that Moynihan cut Gonzales off with the admonition that he was not there to discuss labor issues. Moynihan specifically recalled the conversation was otherwise social, very limited, and brief.

Moynihan testified that on Saturday, March 26, he received a "stack of resumes" of screened job applicants from the blind newspaper ads and commenced interviewing candidates. He spent the day entire interviewing. He testified that during the interview process he remained unsure whether Respondent would be hiring the Maersk unit employees or the individuals selected from those who responded to the blind newspaper advertisements. The two groups were exclusive, no Maersk employees had learned of Respondent's off-site interview process or responded to the advertisements.

Respondent took its final decision not to join PMA and not to hire the Maersk employees, according to Hunt, after casual conversations between Hunt and DeJoy, DeJoy and counsel, and DeJoy and others. DeJoy testified that his decision was made "close to the end of it," without placing a specific date on his decision. DeJoy testified that ultimately the complexity and potential liability to Respondent of the commitments involved in joining PMA convinced him in the end not to join. He testified that the possibility that Respondent would be obligated to high cost labor over the entire west coast as a result of joining PMA was a factor in the decision. He specifically denied, however, that “any decision in recruiting the work force was based in any part on someone’s having once been a Maersk employee or having been affiliated with any union.”

On Sunday, March 27, in the afternoon or evening, Moynihan testified that he and DeJoy spoke by telephone. DeJoy told him a decision had been made not to join PMA and DeJoy instructed Moynihan to “go ahead and select from the people I had interviewed for employment.” DeJoy’s instructions were put into effect.

Eric Gonzales testified that on Monday morning, March 28, the first work day following his Friday evening conversation with Moynihan, he randomly informed his fellow employees at the army terminal of Moynihan’s remarks to him. Gonzales was corroborated regarding both the conversations and concerning the specifics of Moynihan’s remarks described by Gonzales, by Maersk employees Bernice Gald, Ricky Ponce, and Linda Kennedy.

Gald testified she has a conversation with Moynihan on Monday in which she reminded him of the subpoena matter and the letter he had agreed to have sent. She testified he responded not to her statements about the subpoena but rather said that he could not answer all of Gonzales’ questions. When she responded that Gonzales that had nothing to do with the jury subpoena and repeated her question respecting getting a letter sent to the court, Moynihan said he had faxed the subpoena to North Carolina. When Gald expressed concern respecting the short time remaining until her Monday, April 5, appearance date pursuant to the jury subpoena, Moynihan responded, in Gald’s recollection, “Oh, that is no problem. My company is real good about Overnight Mail, and they will get the letter back to you.”

Ricky Ponce testified that after Gonzales reported his conversation with Moynihan, he waited for Moynihan, and confronted him as he arrived at work. Ponce testified,

I stopped [Moynihan] right at the foot of the doorway there, and I asked him, “What the heck is going on here? Eric [Gonzales] is telling me the whole story has changed, and we don’t know if we are going to be here.” I wanted to know what was going on.

Q. And what did he say?

A. He said—actually, he didn’t know what was going on. He didn’t know if he was going to be there. He mentioned something about he had just gotten married or something, and he didn’t even know if he was going to move his wife over here, so he was caught in the dark and didn’t know what the heck was going on.

So, in turn, I told him, “Well, maybe you don’t want us here, but being that you belong to PMA at the time”—I understood that they were under PMA—I told him, “We may not be here, but there will be an ILWU work force here, because you are under PMA. And what I am going to have to do is I am going to have to get in touch with my Union officials and we are going to go from there.”

And he mentioned something to the effect that, “We have dealt with ILA”—something with reference to

ILA. And in turn, I turned about and I said, “Well, we are not ILA. We are ILWU.” And I said, “I will talk to my Union officials, and I got to do what I got to do, and you got to do what you got to do.” I put out my hand, and we shook hands, and we turned around and he walked one direction and I walked in the other.

Ponce also testified that on the same day he told Maersk Terminal Manager Constanti that it was possible that the Maersk work force would not be retained by Respondent.

On that Monday, consistent with his earlier promise to keep the Colonel informed, Moynihan met with Colonel Faver and told him that Respondent had decided to go with its own work force rather than hire the Maersk employees and that Respondent was conducting offsite job applicant interviews.

Moynihan testified that Respondent made up its mind respecting which applicants to offer employment on Tuesday, March 28, and made job offers to applicants on March 29 with some applicants being contacted on Wednesday, March 30. On Wednesday Moynihan again met with Colonel Faver. Colonel Faver testified that Moynihan indicated that the interviews appeared to be going well. He did make a statement—yes, he did make a statement that he was surprised that none of the current employees had requested an interview or filed an application, whatever their process was.

Constanti, Moynihan, and Colonel Faver met on Thursday, March 31. Moynihan again indicated that Respondent was, in Colonel Faver’s recollection, “going to go with our own work force, we are not going to retain this group of people.” In Moynihan’s recollection this was the first time he had informed anyone save Colonel Faver that Respondent was not going to retain the Maersk work force. There was discussion on how to disseminate the news to the Maersk staff and union officials who were arriving at the premises.

In the event Moynihan met with union officials and announced Respondent’s intentions later that day. Thereafter Maersk employees were informed they would not be retained by Respondent. The union officials were displeased, the employees upset, but the day passed without grave incident. This was the last day any of the Maersk employees worked.⁷

3. Respondent’s operation of the army terminal

On April 1, 1994, Respondent commenced operations of the army terminal with a staff of eight or nine employees⁸ of whom three were office clericals. Respondent at no time has recognized or bargained with the Unions respecting any army terminal employee. Respondent neither bargained with the Unions respecting the setting of initial terms and conditions of its employees employment nor subsequent changes in those terms.

⁷Subsequent events occurring pursuant to a Federal district court order in an action brought under Sec. 10(j) of the Act are not relevant to a determination of the merits of the March and April 1994 unfair labor practice allegations and are therefore not considered.

⁸The new employees, as noted above, were hired on March 28 and 29. Training, with Army assistance, took place on March 30 and 31.

Although Respondent's terms and conditions of its army terminal employees' employment are similar to those applicable to Maersk employees till April 1, there is no doubt they differed in significant ways. Further, Respondent did not maintain the job descriptions and classifications of unit employees utilized by Maersk under its contracts with the Unions, but rather assigned employees with far less concern respecting particular work jurisdiction.

C. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Basic arguments of the parties

The General Counsel argues that Respondent failed to consider and hire Maersk's army terminal unit employees because of a desire to avoid being obligated to recognize and bargain with the Unions respecting the two Maersk army terminal bargaining units. In so failing and refusing, the General Counsel argues, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act with respect to each Maersk unit employee. From this starting point, the General Counsel argues further that, had Respondent not violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act as described, Respondent would have been obligated to recognize and bargain with the Unions as a successor employer. Further, because the constructive successorship occurred before Respondent commenced operations, Respondent under Board law was obligated to bargain with the Unions respecting initial terms and conditions of unit employees. The General Counsel argues that Respondent's failure to recognize the Unions as the exclusive representative of the army terminal employees as well as its failure to bargain respecting both initial terms and all subsequent changes in terms and conditions of employment violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

The Charging Parties take the same position as the General Counsel respecting the alleged violations of the Act described above, but make additional contentions. They argue that Respondent actually or constructively joined PMA and recognized and bargained with the Unions and was therefore obligated not only to recognize and bargain with the Unions, but also was legally bound to the PMA collective-bargaining agreements for their terms. Thus, the Charging Parties argue that the remedy for the violations found should include a requirement that Respondent be held a part of the PMA multi-employer unit and that Respondent be bound to the PMA-Union collective-bargaining agreements in force with respect to Maersk unit employees.

Respondent does not so much dispute the General Counsel or the Charging Parties' legal arguments as challenge the underlying factual assumptions necessary to sustain them. Thus, Respondent argues that the record contains insufficient credible evidence to suggest, let alone sustain, a finding that Respondent's hiring for the army terminal was other than customary, benign, and permissible under the Act. Given that no Maersk employee was improperly denied employment by Respondent, Respondent argues no successorship obligation on Respondent's parts exists and no violations of the Act occurred.

2. Arguments of the Charging Parties respecting additional violations and or special remedies

The Charging Parties on brief present a scholarly argument that the facts and case law require that Respondent be held to have: (1) joined PMA; (2) become a part of the multiemployer bargaining unit; and (3) adopted and hence become bound to the relevant collective-bargaining contracts. A threshold issue is presented, however, by the fact that the General Counsel did not plead in his complaint nor did counsel for the General Counsel contend at the hearing that Respondent had ever joined PMA, failed to join PMA for improper reasons, or ever recognized the Unions or bargained with them. To the contrary, in colloquy at the hearing, counsel for the General Counsel made it clear that she specifically rejected each such argument.

The Charging Parties initially concede "that Section 3(d) of the Act vests the General Counsel with exclusive jurisdiction with respect to the prosecution of unfair labor practice complaints." They argue, however, that the Board in Kaunagraph Corp., 313 NLRB 624 (1994), held the Board, not the General Counsel, is responsible for fashioning remedies for unfair labor practices and therefore the General Counsel's control over the complaint does not preclude litigation respecting what the appropriate remedy should be for the violations alleged. In this respect the Charging Parties assert on brief at 23:

[T]he evidence and caselaw support the conclusion that the appropriate remedy of restoration of the status quo ante by New Breed as a legal successor should include the requirement that New Breed reinstate or perfect membership in the PMA and adhere to its adoption of the [applicable collective bargaining agreements] in accordance with its clearly expressed intentions.

The Charging Parties correctly argue that the Board not the General Counsel is charged with the obligation under the statute to craft appropriate remedies for unfair labor practice violations. This principle, however, is not to be applied so broadly that it swallows the General Counsel's discretion in respect of the issuance of complaints. The decision in Kaunagraph Corp. and others of like ilk stand for the proposition that, once a complaint allegation is made by the General Counsel, all appropriate remedies for the violation may be considered, even if the General Counsel does not advance or even opposes a particular remedy. These cases do not challenge the fundamental notion, however, that if a particular violation of the Act is not alleged by the General Counsel and such a violation is necessary for a particular remedy to be invoked then the General Counsel has, by refusing to allege such a violation, precluded the Board from directing such a remedy.

The threshold issue to be decided here, therefore, is whether or not the remedy sought by the Charging Party, i.e., an order requiring Respondent to join the PMA and be bound by the current collective-bargaining agreements, may be sustained by the current complaint or requires additional independent allegations of violations of the Act.

Considering the record herein and the case law on the question of an employer's membership in multiemployer associations, I find that the remedy sought by the Charging Parties may not be supported on the current complaint but rather requires the finding of additional violations of the Act not alleged in the complaint. More particularly I find that for any remedy to include directing Respondent to sign or adopt the contract as part of the PMA multiemployer unit, the complaint must have included an allegation that was sustained by the evidence that Respondent either had joined or wrongfully refused to join the PMA. Indeed the very cases cited by the Charging Parties for the proposition that the remedies the Charging Parties seek are appropriate involve specific complaint allegations by the General Counsel respecting such conduct. Thus, for example, World Evangelism, 248 NLRB 909 (1980), deals with a successor bargaining obligation. The issue of whether or not the employer in that case had bound itself to the successor contract was specifically alleged as a separate violation of the Act and handled as a separate violation of the Act by the administrative law judge, 248 NLRB at 916, rather than as a question of remedy.

Put another way, the remedy sought by the Charging Parties presupposes violations of the Act not contained in the complaint and expressly disavowed by the General Counsel. To hold that a remedy in the instant case should include an order directing Respondent to join or rejoin the PMA as part of a status quo ante remedy for violations of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act implicitly suggests that Respondent should be held to have joined the PMA as a matter of law and its failure to acknowledge that fact and its legal consequences was wrongful. Counsel for the General Counsel expressly indicated at trial that such a contention was not being made. Similarly, to include a make-sign order requiring Respondent to sign the applicable PMA-Union contracts as part of the remedy directed in the case, requires a finding that Respondent wrongfully breached its obligation to sign such an agreement. Again the General Counsel did not contend Respondent had such an obligation nor include such allegations in the complaint.

Based on all the above, I find the complaint will not support the remedies the Charging Parties seek, irrespective of the question of whether or not the record would support such relief had the complaint included the allegations found necessary above. I find that what the Charging Parties seek is not simply to obtain a remedy for the violations alleged but rather to expand the scope of the complaint. Because the complaint is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the General Counsel, who has declined to adopt the violations of law the Charging Parties advance herein, I shall also decline to consider the arguments of the Charging Parties on the merits of the unfair labor practice contentions they advance. Accordingly, I shall not further consider the contentions of the Charging Parties in these regards.

3. Resolution of testimonial conflicts

Although the greater portion of evidence respecting events herein was not at material variance, several important conversations or portions of conversations were in dispute. Although the entire record including the demeanor of witnesses is relevant to and was a basis for resolving the evidentiary conflicts presented, the more important disputes are set forth separately below for purposes of greater understanding and clarity.

a. The Moynihan-Gonzales contentions respecting their offsite conversations

As described above, Eric Gonzales testified to two detailed conversations with James Moynihan on Thursday and Friday March 24 and 25 at a local bar. Moynihan agreed that he had the two conversations with Gonzales at the place and about the times indicated, but Moynihan specifically denied that either conversation dealt with work issues or that he made any of the work related comments attributed to him by Gonzales.

Although the two individuals conversed alone and neither witness's version of the conversation is susceptible to direct corroboration, the conversations were repeated to others. Thus, Gonzales testified that he reported each conversation to other Maersk employees the morning of the first workday after its occurrence. As noted above, several Maersk employees corroborated Gonzales testimony in this regard. I credit both Gonzales and the corroborating witnesses in this testimony and find he made the reports to employees reciting his conversation with Moynihan substantially as he described in his testimony. This finding strongly supports Gonzales' version concerning what Moynihan said in their conversations because Gonzales would without doubt not have given detailed reports respecting Moynihan's remarks to the other employees unless the conversations occurred as he testified or unless he was involved in some elaborate plot too fantastic to reasonably contemplate on this record. Further supporting my finding here, I found Gonzales' demeanor to be significantly superior to that of Moynihan particularly during the portion of the latter's testimony at issue here.

In summary, based on the record as a whole, the demeanor of the two witnesses and the corroboration that Gonzales' testimony received through the testimony of witnesses who received his almost contemporary reports of Moynihan's statements to him, I credit Gonzales over Moynihan when the two differ. I find therefore that Moynihan on Thursday, March 24, told Gonzales that he intended to retain the Maersk staff and that he told Gonzales on March 25 that he had heard from his superiors that he had no right to tell Gonzales "anything about labor" and that he was not going to have anything to do with the initial hiring decisions.

b. The subpoena issues

Bernise Gald and Linda Kennedy testified as described above about various conversations with Lee and Moynihan concerning a subpoena Gald had received for jury duty. Moynihan and Lee, in essence, disputed the specifics of the two Maersk employees' testimony. The version of events given by the two Maersk employees is the more coherent and logical and is mutually corroborative. Their demeanor was superior to that of Lee and Moynihan on the issue. Lee and Moynihan struck me in their testimony as simply preferring to deny or fail to recall actions and statements that they felt might be inconsistent with their employer's defense. The two Maersk employees to the contrary convinced me they were testifying truthfully about events they clearly recalled. Accordingly, I credit Gald and Kennedy over Lee and Moynihan when the testimony on the matter differs.

c. Statements in contest respecting Respondent's intention to hire Maersk employees

Union Officials Joe Ibarra and Jerry Rich contended either William Lee or James Moynihan was directly asked if Respondent was retaining the current Maersk employees and that one or the other specifically said that Maersk's employees would be retained by Respondent in the meeting of the four individuals at the union premises on March 21. Neither Moynihan nor Lee acknowledged either being asked if Respondent would retain the Maersk employees or asserting that Respondent would in fact do so.

I specifically credit Iberra and Rich and discredit Moynihan and Lee who, I believe, found it convenient to simply fail to recall statements made which they wished had not been made. Beyond the question of demeanor, which strongly favored Iberra and Rich in this aspect of their testimony, I find it very probable that the union agents would have asked about the Maersk employees they then represented and would have remembered the favorable response of Respondent's agents. The issue of the employees' retention was a matter of import to the Union and the individuals in the represented bargaining units. Because Moynihan's testimony made it clear that he was sure that the union agents at the meeting believed that the Maersk employees would be retained, there is no question that the subject was in the minds of all at the meeting. Given all the above, I find little reason to doubt the union agents' testimony that they received explicit assurances in that regard from Respondent.

I reach the same conclusion for similar reasons respecting the contention of Maersk employee Kevin Reilly that Respondent's agent, Woods, in reviewing Reilly's duties at the workplace told him Maersk employees would be retained. I find it highly probable that a Maersk employee would regard it of primary importance to learn if his or her job were to continue into the following month and would ask an official of the new employer if his or her job was safe. Further, having received such an assurance, I do not believe that the employee would be inclined to miscall the answer received, nor do I believe that Reilly simply lied about the conversation. I was particularly impressed with the demeanor of the Maersk employees including Reilly and am convinced his testimony was consistent with his recollection of events.

I think that Woods, like other of Respondent's agents, gave initial assurances to Maersk employees that they would be hired and, when the subsequent events and litigation made that conduct inconvenient to acknowledge, simply forgot that it had occurred. In denying the attributions of the employees, Woods, like Moynihan and Lee discussed above, struck me as a witness not testifying from a memory of events but rather denying inconvenient actions directly or through the mechanism of an asserted failure to recall.

4. Hiring issues—the 8(a)(3) and (1) allegations

a. Argument of the parties respecting Respondent's hiring motivation

The parties argued at trial and on brief at length regarding Respondent's motivation underlying its hiring of staff at the army terminal. Addressing the highlights of those arguments here, Respondent argues that as a commercial entity it has an established philosophy disfavoring wholesale hiring of the employees of the employers whose operations Respondent assumed. Further, Respondent argues that it has had a consistent practice of utilizing "blind" newspaper advertisements as a means of creating an initial pool of job applicants from which final hires were made. Respondent argues that its hiring at the army terminal, both with respect to its placement of newspaper advertisements and its nonsolicitation of Maersk's army terminal employees, was consistent with its past practice and therefore free from improper, unlawful, or antirepresentational considerations.

The General Counsel and the Charging Parties attack Respondent's argument in several ways. First, they argue that the past practices of Respondent were not in fact followed at the army terminal. Thus, the prosecution emphasizes that Respondent in its bid had documents specifically represented that it had made provisions to work the PMA to acquire a skilled work force and further represented:

For long-term employees, a selection process will begin not later than March 15. These opportunities can be posted and selection conducted under PMA auspices to ensure employees of known skill levels.

The New Breed site manager will be a participant on the implementation team. Supervisors will be selected and will begin training by March 21st and workers by March 28th. If existing employees are retained, they will be working already, and any added training will take place as soon as possible.

Thus, the General Counsel argues that Respondent in the instant case had in effect publicly committed itself from the very beginning of its efforts to obtain the army terminal contract to the hire of the existing employees and that, whether by using the auspices of the PMA or the retention of the existing employees, Respondent was not following its past practices.

The General Counsel and the Charging Parties further argue that, unlike all of Respondent's earlier hiring experiences described in the record, Respondent's advertisement and job hire implementation in the instant case did not occur early on in the bidding process. Thus, the past practice of Respondent was to advertise for employment well before the operation was to be started and in many cases even before Respondent was assured of receiving the work. In the instant case Respondent's hiring occurred well after the bid had been awarded Respondent and within a very few days of the time Respondent was to commence operations.

The General Counsel and the Charging Party argue that the credible record evidence supports the conclusion that Respondent at all times intended to hire outside or nonpredcessor employees so as to avoid creating any obligation to recognize and bargain with the Unions. Thus the moving parties argue that Respondent's contacts with PMA and the Unions as well as the statements made by its agents to Maersk employees were simply part of an elaborate charade designed to conceal Respondent's true intention to hire outside employees and operate without recognizing and bargaining with the Unions until the last possible minute. The General Counsel argues Respondent's agents affirmatively deceived both the Maersk employees and the Union by asserting the Maersk employees would be hired while following a concealed parallel track of offsite interviews and hiring.

Respondent argues that, while it did give initial consideration to joining PMA and, consequently, recognizing the Unions, it ultimately did not join the PMA for business reasons which, in all events, are not under challenge by the General Counsel. Having made that decision, Respondent argues, it simply utilized its usual hiring practices and, indifferent to the source of its job applicants as former Maersk employees or no, hired those applicants it felt most qualified for the positions open without consideration of irrelevant factors such as applicants' former Maersk unit employee status or union membership and without consideration of its potential bargaining obligations.

b. Findings and conclusions

(1) Respondent's creation of two hiring options

On this record and given the credibility resolutions noted above, I find as follows. It is clear that in the initial stages of the bid process, Respondent's agents, both as reflected in their contacts with PMA and in the representations, quoted above in its bid documents, either decided to or strongly considered joining PMA and adopting and applying the collective-bargaining contracts to its army terminal operations.⁹ Part and parcel of this action was hiring through PMA's "auspices," which, it soon became apparent, included retaining Maersk unit employees.

It is also clear that, either a part of initial caution or as a result of second thoughts respecting its earlier decision, Respondent endeavored to create a second option, that is the choice of neither joining PMA or using PMA to staff the operation. This management decision to create a second option occurred no later than its determination to place blind employment advertisements in a local paper. The testimony indicates that this occurred no later than March 17 or 18. The record seems clear that each option was still under consideration at that time. Thus, Hunt or Lee told Colonel Faver in their March 17 meeting, in Colonel Faver's recollection¹⁰ that I credit, that no decision on "the future of the current work force" had as yet been made by Respondent. This is consistent with Moynihan's version of events. He testified that he was told by CEO LeJoy that same day that "there were decisions yet to be made concerning labor."

From the testimony it is also clear that a final decision by Respondent's highest level of management respecting retention of the Maersk staff had still not been made by Friday, March 25. Colonel Favor testified that Moynihan told him on that day that Respondent's decision respecting the work force would be made by headquarters that coming weekend. Moynihan and LeJoy each testified that the final decision was made that weekend.

⁹Such a course is not wildly improbable even for employers who have no previous experience with represented units. The contract that Respondent was pursuing through its bid covered the wages of employees. Such an agreement would greatly facilitate staffing. Further as Justice White noted in NLRB v. Burns International Security Services, 406 U.S. 272 at 291 (1972):

In many cases, of course, successor employers will find it advantageous not only to recognize and bargain with the union, but also to observe the pre-existing contract rather than to face uncertainty and turmoil.

¹⁰Colonel Faver was a no-nonsense, straight forward witness with an impressive demeanor, firm recollections, and no evident stake in shaping his testimony to favor any particular point of view. I found his testimony highly credible and have relied on it heavily in reaching my findings.

(2) Respondent's hiring decisions

(a) The legal standard to be applied

None of the above findings respecting timing are inconsistent with either the General Counsel and the Charging Parties' or Respondent's argued view of Respondent's motivation in hiring. Given my rejection of the Charging Parties' argument that Respondent was obligated to join the PMA as precluded by the General Counsel's contrary position, Respondent's argument that, once having decided not to join PMA, it thereafter simply hired employees consistent with its past practice based on an objective evaluation of their merits irrespective of their former status as Maersk unit employees, is not implausible and, if sustained, defeats the 8(a)(3) allegations of the complaint.

The General Counsel, having taken the position that Respondent's decision not to join the PMA was not improper, argues, however, that Respondent further specifically determined not to hire the predecessor's (i.e., Maerck's) employees in order to avoid being obligated as a successor to recognize and bargain with the Unions. Thus, the General Counsel argues that the Maersk employees were deliberately not hired because of their union activities and the fact of their union representation. Thus, the General Counsel argues that Respondent engaged in a course of conduct designed to avoid hiring Maerck employees in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

The burden of proof respecting the issue of Respondent's motivation in hiring is squarely born by the General Counsel. In a situation such as that presented herein the Board applies the causation test enunciated in Wright Line, 251 NLRB 1083 (1980), enfd. 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied 455 U.S. 989 (1982); approved in NLRB v. Transportation Management Corp., 462 U.S. 393 (1983). See, e.g., Champion Rivet Co., 314 NLRB 1097 (1994). Under the Wright Line standard the General Counsel is required to make a prima facie showing sufficient to support the inference that protected conduct was a motivating factor in the employer's decision not to hire the predecessor's employees. If this is established, the burden shifts to the employer to demonstrate that the same action would have taken place even in the absence of the protected conduct.

Further, the Board noted in U.S. Marine Corp., 293 NLRB 669 at 670 (1989):

The Board has held that the following factors are among those that establish that a new owner has violated Section 8(a)(3) in refusing to hire employees of the predecessor: substantial evidence of union animus; lack of a convincing rationale for refusal to hire the predecessor's employees; inconsistent hiring practices or overt acts or conduct evidencing a discriminatory motive; and evidence supporting a reasonable inference that the new owner conducted its staffing in a manner precluding the predecessors employees from being hired as a majority of the new owner's overall work force to avoid the Board's successorship doctrine.³

(b) Conclusions respecting Respondent's motivation in hiring

(i) The General Counsel's prima facie case

Applying Wright Line with the quoted factors set forth in U.S. Marine in mind, I find the General Counsel has met his burden to make a prima facie showing sufficient to support the inference that protected conduct was a motivating factor in Respondent's decision not to hire the Maersk employees. I do so for the following reasons.

First, I accept the General Counsel and the Charging Parties' argument that the past practice of Respondent respecting hiring is largely inapplicable to the instant situation because of the very different timing and circumstances presented. Thus, the lateness of the hiring relative to its assumption of operations, the fact that Respondent had earlier announced an intention to use PMA auspices to accomplish hiring and the fact that it had made it clear to the Maersk employees and the Union that the Maersk employees would be retained—all these factors distinguish the instant case from Respondent's previous hiring experiences.

Second, and most critical to my finding, I find that Respondent took two actions that together precluded hire of Maersk employees. Thus, I find that Respondent initially set up two exclusive pools of potential army terminal employees—those who responded to its blind newspaper advertisements and the Maersk employees—and affirmatively acted to keep the Maersk employees from being aware of or becoming part of the former group of newspaper advertisement responders. Thus, as found above, Respondent's agents took various steps to convince the Unions and Maersk employees that the Maersk employees would be retained. These assurances combined with Respondent's failure to divulge the existence of the offsite application and hiring process effectively precluded the Unions or Maersk employees from ever becoming aware of or participating in the offsite hiring process.

In making this finding I specifically reject Respondent's contentions that Maersk employees could have applied for and would then have been considered for employment. Respondent's affirmative acts of deception, as found above, fatally impeach this assertion. I reject as improbable, incredible, and insincere Moynihan's assertion to Colonel Faver that he was surprised that no Maersk employees had applied for employment. I also find the testimony of Moynihan that he referred Maersk employees to headquarters when they asked about the employment process at the very time other Respondent agents were screening applicants off site in Compton supports my finding. Given the fact that Moynihan knew Gonzales had repeated to Maersk employees Moynihan's barroom statements to Gonzales that the Maersk employees were to be retained, Moynihan well knew those employees were unlikely to take active steps to apply for jobs in essence already promised them.

Respondent's second action was to insure that only non-Maersk employees were hired for Respondent's army terminal operations. Having created and maintained two separate pools¹¹ of potential hires, Respondent's chief executive officer instructed his agents to hire all employees from the pool that excluded the Maersk employees. In the March 27, 1994 conversation in which LeJoy informed Moynihan that Respondent would not be joining the PMA, he also instructed Moynihan whom to hire. Moynihan testified LeJoy told him to "go ahead and select from the people I had interviewed for employment." At no time was the possibility of belatedly informing Maersk employees of the hiring process or otherwise considering offering employment to Maersk employees ever contemplated. Thus, Respondent decided to hire only from a pool of applicants from which all Maersk employees had been excluded. This is strong evidence in my view that Respondent was motivated to exclude all Maersk employees from potential hire.

Even if Respondent's constructive exclusion of the Maersk employees from the pool of applicants was benign up to this point, which I do not find, Respondent did not thereafter solicit applications from Maersk employees who, being unaware of the process, did not apply. Indeed, Moynihan, even as late as Monday, March 28, the day following his receipt of LeJoy's instructions to begin hiring from the newspaper applicant pool, continued to actively mislead Maersk employees into believing that they were being retained by Respondent. Thus, Moynihan on that day, in Gald's credited testimony, continued to represent to her that Respondent was taking care of her jury duty obligation so that she could be present at work during the transition to Respondent's operation of the army terminal. This continuing pattern of misstatements to employees, clearly intended to create the impression that they would be hired by Respondent, even after a specific decision had been made and communicated to Moynihan that the Maersk employees were not to be retained, further demonstrates that Respondent sought to exclude all Maersk employees for its applicant pool.

I find from all of the above compelling evidence that Respondent intended to avoid hiring Maersk employees and undertook a course of conduct designed to and successful in reaching the intended result—the exclusion of all Maersk employees from the selected hiring pool. Given the fact that the timing of the decision not to hire Maersk employees was coterminous with Respondent's decision not to join PMA, a strong inference may be drawn, and which on this record I do draw, that the reason for the decision sounded in the representational consequences of the hiring choices. Respondent simply wanted to avoid any of the numerous complications that would arise if a successorship obligation was created as a result of the hiring of Maersk employees.¹² advance one. Rather, Respondent argues that its job hires were based on individual determinations of applicant merit and that Maersk employees who applied would have been evaluated on their individual merits as were other applicants.

¹² I reject Respondent's arguments that it was essentially ignorant of the legal consequences of hiring or not hiring a majority of the predecessor's employees in a previously union represented bargaining unit. Respondent's management officials did not impress me as either ignorant or naive respecting the commercial world. Further, as noted above, CEO LeJoy took legal counsel before deciding not to join the PMA or retain the Maersk staff.

- (ii) Respondent's argument that it would not have hired the Maersk employees irrespective of the fact of their representation by the Unions

Once the General Counsel has established a prima facie case under Wright Line, the burden shifts to Respondent to demonstrate that the same action would have taken place even in the absence of protected conduct. Thus, Respondent bears the burden of demonstrating that the Maersk employees would not have been hired, even had they never been represented by the Unions.

Two general types of arguments were made by Respondent that the Maersk employees would not have been hired. The first, that generally Respondent did not approve of hiring predecessor employer employees as a class because of possible trouble from the former employer, is not persuasive in the instant case because, as discussed in detail above, Respondent had widely announced its intention of retaining the employees and because the lateness of the hiring decisions made the hiring of experienced staff highly desirable. Past practice was simply not controlling in the instant, significantly different circumstances.

Respondent argued further that the initial impressions of the Maersk employees taken by Respondent's agents in their initial visits to the premises and in conversations with PMA agents, Maersk agents, and other individuals was that they were a dismal and inefficient lot who were unworthy of hire. Respondent is entitled to form subjective impressions of employment applicants and to hire them or not hire them based on any reason or reasons other than those prohibited under the Act. Had Respondent come to dislike and refuse to hire the Maersk employees either as a class or individually for benign reasons, Respondent's defense would be sustained and the 8(a)(3) complaint allegations dismissed.

Respondent's assertions must be addressed in two parts. First, to the extent Respondent is asserting that the Maersk employees were properly rejected as a class, based on their work quality, Respondent has not sustained its burden of proof. To the contrary, Moynihan's statements to Gonzales, as found above, establish that Moynihan, the onsite manager who had a major role in the final selection of new employees, thought well of at least some of the Maersk employees and intended to retain them if he could. I simply do not find the testimony of Respondent's witnesses respecting their unfavorable impressions of the Maersk work force generally is sufficient to overcome the substantial evidence that there were Maersk employees who were viewed objectively and subjectively as worthy of consideration by Respondent. Indeed, Respondent's argument that any Maersk employee who had applied for employment would have been considered on his or her own merits, supports my finding that the Maersk employees, as a class, were not and could not properly have been rejected by Respondent.

Respondent's argument also suggests that, if some or all of the Maersk employees had applied for employment with Respondent, they would have been rejected individually based on their individual merits as compared to the individuals actually hired. Even when, as here, a general finding of impermissible motivation in hiring has been made, a respondent may show that individual predecessor employees would not have been hired under any circumstances. See, e.g., Honda of Hayward, 307 NLRB 340 (1992).

Respondent on this record, however, has not established sufficient credible evidence that, had any particular Maersk employee applied for employment with Respondent, that person would have been rejected on his or her merits irrespective of the union representation issue. Not only does Respondent bear the burden on the issue as set forth in Wright Line, it also bears the additional burden resulting from the fact that it was its unlawful conduct that caused the Maersk employees to be ignorant of and hence not participant in the offsite interview and hiring process as all those who were ultimately hired did. Thus, it is a matter of speculation what would have occurred had Maersk employees participated in the offsite interview and hiring process. The Board has long held that to the extent there is uncertainty with respect to what a respondent would have done absent its unlawful purpose, such uncertainty must be resolved against the wrongdoer who cannot be permitted to benefit from its unlawful conduct. Love's Barbecue Restaurant No. 62, 245 NLRB 768 (1979). Given the essential paucity of evidence respecting particular Maersk employees and what would have happened had they applied, I find Respondent's arguments in this respect fail on their facts.

(iii) Summary and conclusions

In summary, I have found that Respondent undertook a course of conduct that was designed to prevent and succeed in preventing Maersk unit employees from participating in the offsite interview and hiring process that was the exclusive source of Respondent's employees for its army terminal operations. I further found that Respondent motivation for this exclusion was a desire to insure that no Maersk employees were hired so as to avoid any possible obligation as a successor employer to recognize and bargain with the Unions who represented the Maersk employee bargaining units. Respondent's failure to hire the Maersk unit employees because of the fact of their union representation and the desire to avoid an obligation to recognize and bargain with the Unions as a successor employer is a violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. The General Counsel's complaint paragraph 11(a) is therefore sustained.

5. The bargaining issues—the 8(a)(5) allegations

a. The existence of a bargaining obligation

Because the General Counsel makes no contention that Respondent ever recognized the Unions as representatives of its employees, the only theoretical mechanism for obligating Respondent to recognize and bargain with the Unions is a successor employer's obligation to recognize the union or unions that represented its predecessor's employees. Under the Supreme Court's doctrine established in NLRB v. Burns International Security Services, 406 U.S. 272 (1972), and its progeny, a new employer is bound to recognize and bargain with the labor organization that represented the predecessor employer's employees under certain conditions.¹³ Relevant here is the successorship requirement that the new employer have hired a majority of the predecessor's work force in the relevant units.

Respondent in fact hired none of the predecessor's work force. The General Counsel has alleged and I have found, however, that Respondent wrongfully failed to hire the predecessor's unit employees. In such circumstances the Board determines what the employee compliment would have been had the Act not been violated and applies its successorship standards to that situation. Honda of Hayward, 307 NLRB 340 (1992). As found above on this record I have concluded that had Respondent not violated the Act it would have hired the Maersk unit employees who would then have constituted a majority, if not the entirety, of Respondent's employees in each of the two bargaining units at issue. Given the constructive majority existing in each bargaining unit, I find that Respondent was a successor to Maersk regarding each unit and therefore was obligated to recognize and bargain with the Unions concerning each.

b. The time of attachment of the bargaining obligation

A separate issue arises respecting the specific date Respondent's bargaining obligations respecting each unit attached. The normal successorship bargaining obligation arises at the time the successor employer has hired a majority of the predecessor's employees. The obligation does not in such situations arise at the onset of Respondent's hiring, but only after a sufficient number of employees have been hired to make the final numeric outcome known. The fact that the bargaining obligation does not typically attach at the very beginning of an employer's hire of employees is important because, if an employer is not obligated from the inception of its hiring to bargain with a labor organization concerning terms and conditions of employees' employment, it is free to set initial terms and conditions of employment of its employees and to change those conditions without bargaining with the union until the time the bargaining obligation attaches.

A different situation obtains in those situations when a new employer makes it clear before any hiring occurs that it intends to retain the predecessor's employees. In such a situation, it is obvious from the onset that the union will represent a majority of the successor's employees and the bargaining obligation therefore attaches immediately, before employees have been hired. In such a situation the employer is not free to set initial terms and conditions of employment without bargaining with the labor organization or organizations that represent the employees. In such a situation, the terms of employment maintained by the predecessor must be carried forward unless and until bargaining has occurred. The Board discusses these timing issues and their consequences in Spruce Up Corp., 209 NLRB 194 (1974).

In the instant case I have found that Moynihan told an employee, before Respondent hired any employees, that Respondent would retain all the Maersk employees. I have also found that Respondent's subsequent determination not to retain the Maersk was improper and a violation of the Act. I find it is appropriate on this record to rely on the statement of Moynihan and the other evidence that, but for the desire to avoid being bound as a successor, Respondent would have hired the Maersk work force and hold Respondent to have determined, before any unit employees were hired, that the predecessor's unit complements would be retained.

Given this factual finding, I further find that Respondent was obligated from the commencement of its operations, and before it hired any non-Maersk unit employees, to recognize and bargain with the Unions respecting the employees in the two bargaining units noted above. Thus, Respondent was obligated to bargain with the Unions about the terms and conditions of unit employees it offered the unit employees it hired and was obligated to obtain the agreement of the Unions or bargain to impasse on any changes in those employees' terms and conditions from the Maersk terms.

c. Conclusions

I have found that Respondent was obligated as a successor to recognize and bargain with the Unions respecting the bargaining units they represented with the predecessor employer, Maersk, and that Respondent was obligated to do so from the onset of its hiring of unit employees. There is no dispute that Respondent never recognized nor bargained with the Unions concerning unit employees' terms and conditions of employment nor matched the terms and conditions of employment earlier applied to Maersk's unit employees under the PMA contracts with the Unions.¹⁴ Once Respondent's operations were underway, it continued to change unit employees' terms and conditions of employment in material ways without recognizing, notifying, or providing the Unions an opportunity to bargain respecting the changes.

Respondent's failure to recognize and bargain with the Union's concerning the two bargaining units, as noted above, including its failure to bargain respecting the setting of unit employees initial terms and conditions of employment and subsequent changes in those terms and conditions of employment, violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Accordingly, and based on the entire record, I sustain the General Counsel's complaint allegations 8, 9, 10(b), and 11(b), (c), and (d).¹⁵

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall order it to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act. With respect to the appropriate remedy of the violations of Section 8(a)(3) and (5) of the Act, I shall follow the teachings of Fremont Ford, 289 NLRB 1290, 1297-1298 (1988).

I shall order Respondent to offer the former Maersk unit employees in writing immediate, full, and unconditional employment in the unit positions they occupied when employed by Maersk, terminating unit employees not formerly employed by Maersk as necessary, if such positions no longer exist, they shall be offered substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges they would have enjoyed if initially hired at the commencement of Respondent's operations, and to make them whole for any loss of earnings and benefits in accordance with F. W. Woolworth Co., 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and New Horizons for the Retarded, 283 NLRB 1173 (1987).

¹⁴Based on the uncontradicted testimony of various witnesses and the stipulations of the parties, I find that Respondent set its own terms and conditions of employment that were in material aspects different from those Maersk unit employees had enjoyed under the PMA contracts.

¹⁵The General Counsel has alleged in pars. 10(a), 13, and 15 of the complaint that Moynihan's statement to the Unions—not to employees—that it would be futile for them to request recognition as the unit employees' representative violated Sec. 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act. In the absence of citation of authority finding such conduct violative of the Act, I decline to sustain the violations alleged.

I shall further order Respondent give all unit employees written notice that it will recognize and bargain with the Unions as specifically identified above as the exclusive representative of employees in each unit. I shall also order Respondent to remove from its records all references to its refusal to employ the Maersk employees and notify each of them in writing that this has been done and further assure them that the fact of their original nonhire will not be used against them in the future.

I shall order Respondent to recognize and, on request, bargain with the Unions identified above as the exclusive representative of all its employees in each unit. I shall also order Respondent, on the Unions' request, to restore the status quo ante with respect to each unit, to rescind the unilateral changes, including all initial terms and conditions of employment different from those in place under Maersk's agreement with the Unions, in unit employees' wages, hours, and terms and conditions of employment implemented on and before April 1, 1994, and subsequently; and to make all affected unit employees whole for losses they incurred by virtue of its unilateral changes in their wages, fringe benefits, and other terms and conditions of employment in accordance with Ogle Protection Service, 183 NLRB 682 (1970), with interest as prescribed in New Horizons for the Retarded, supra.

Respondent shall determine all payments it owes to employee benefit funds in the manner set forth in Merryweather Optical Co., 240 NLRB 1213, 1216 fn. 7 (1970). Respondent shall reimburse its employees in the manner set forth in Kraft Plumbing & Heating, 252 NLRB 891 fn. 2 (1980), enf. 661 F.2d 940 (9th Cir. 1981), for any expenses resulting from Respondent's failure to make these payments.

In view of the widespread and egregious nature of Respondent's violations of the Act, I shall also include a broad cease-and-desist order. See Hickmont Foods, 242 NLRB 1357 (1979).

On the basis of the above findings of fact and the record as a whole, I make the following

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Unions are, and each or them is, labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by failing and refusing to hire the unit employees employed by Maersk in order to avoid an obligation to recognize and bargain with the Unions as a successor employer:

4. At all times since the commencement of Respondent's operations, the Unions, as set forth below, have been the exclusive representative for purposes of collective bargaining of Respondent's employees in the following units:

The longshore and marine clerks unit represented by the Longshore Locals:

All longshoremen and marine clerks employed by Respondent at 1312 Medium Post Command located at 1620 South Wilmington, Compton, California, excluding all other employees, professional employees, management employees, temporary management employees, trainees, confidential employees, salesmen, guards, watchmen, and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

The office clerical unit or OCU represented by Local OCU:

All office clerical employees employed by Respondent at 1312 Medium Post Command located at 1620 South Wilmington, Compton, California, excluding all other employees, professional employees, management employees, temporary management employees, trainees, confidential employees, salesmen, guards, watchmen, and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

5. Commencing in March 1994 and continuing to date, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by engaging in the following acts and conduct:

(a) Failing and refusing to recognize the Unions as the exclusive representatives of employees in the units described above for purposes of collective bargaining.

(b) Failing and refusing to meet and bargain with the Unions respecting the setting of initial terms and conditions of employment of unit employees.

(c) Unilaterally and subsequent changing both initial and subsequent terms and conditions of employment for unit employees without notifying the Unions of such initial terms and subsequent changes nor affording them an opportunity to bargain respecting such initial terms and changes.

6. The above unfair labor practices constitute unfair labor practices effecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended¹⁶

ORDERS

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO SEVER CASE 21-CA-30299

The Charging Parties' Motion to Sever is granted. Case 21-CA-30299 is hereby severed from Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. Case 21-CA-30299 shall remain before the administrative law judge pending decision.

ORDER IN CASES 21-CA-29995 AND 21- CA-30003

The Respondent, New Breed Leasing Corporation, Compton, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall

1. Cease and desist from

(a) Failing and refusing to hire the unit employees of the predecessor employer, Maersk, in order to avoid becoming obligated to recognize and bargain with the Unions as representative of unit employees.

(b) At all times since March 1994 refusing to recognize and bargain in good faith with the Unions as the exclusive representative of the employees in the bargaining units set forth below by:

(1) Failing to recognize the Unions as representative of unit employees.

(2) Failing to meet and bargain with the Unions respecting terms and conditions of employment for unit employees.

(3) Unilaterally setting terms and conditions of employment for bargaining unit employees and thereafter unilaterally changing those terms

(c) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act.

(a) Offer in writing immediate and full reinstatement to all of the former Maersk unit employees to the positions they held with the predecessor discharging as necessary employees in the units not previously employed in the predecessor units or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed while working for its predecessor, and them each of them whole for any loss of earnings and other benefits suffered as a result of the discrimination against them. With the written reinstatement offers, Respondent shall notify these individuals in writing that it will recognize and bargain with the Unions as their exclusive representative.

(b) Remove from its files any reference to the unlawful refusal to hire the Maersk unit employees and notify these employees in writing that this has been done and that this unlawful conduct will not be used against them in any way.

(c) On request, bargain with the Unions as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the following appropriate units concerning employees' terms and conditions of employment and, if understandings are reached, embody said understandings in signed agreements:

The longshore and marine clerks unit represented by the Longshore Locals:

All longshoremen and marine clerks employed by Respondent at 1312 Medium Post Command located at 1620 South Wilmington, Compton, California, excluding all other employees, professional employees, management employees, temporary management employees, trainees, confidential employees, salesmen, guards, watchmen, and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

The office clerical unit or OCU represented by Local OCU:

All office clerical employees employed by Respondent at 1312 Medium Post Command located at 1620 South Wilmington, Compton, California, excluding all other employees, professional employees, management employees, temporary management employees, trainees, confidential employees, salesmen, guards, watchmen, and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

(d) On request of the Unions, restore the status quo ante of unit employees, rescind the unilateral changes in the unit employees' wages, hours, and working conditions that were implemented in the hiring of unit employees in March 1994 and thereafter, and make all affected employees, including those whose employment is directed above, whole for any and all losses they incurred by virtue of the unilateral changes to their wages, fringe benefits, and other terms and conditions of employment from the initial hire of unit employees in March 1994, until it negotiates in good faith with the Unions to agreement or to impasse, in the manner set forth in the remedy section of the decision.

(e) Preserve and, on request, make available to the Board or its agents for examination and copying, all payroll records and other records and documents necessary to analyze the amount of backpay and other moneys due under the terms of this Order and to insure that this Order has been fully complied with.

(f) Post at its Compton, California facility copies of the attached Notice marked "Appendix."¹⁷ Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 21, in English and such other languages as the Regional Director determines are necessary to fully communicate with employees, after being signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted for 60 consecutive days in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to ensure the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by other material.

(g) Notify the Regional Director in writing within 20 days from the date of this Order what steps Respondent has taken to comply.

¹⁷ If this Order is enforced by a judgment of a United States court of appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

DECISION

CLIFFORD H. ANDERSON, Administrative Law Judge. I heard the above-captioned matter in trial in Los Angeles, California, on January 30, 1995. Posthearing briefs were due on March 7, 1995. The case arose as follows.

On April 4, 1994, the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (the ILWU), International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 13 (Local 13), and International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 63 (Local 63) filed a charge with Region 21 of the National Labor Relations Board (the Board) docketed as Case 21-CA-29995 against New Breed Leasing Corporation (Respondent or the Employer). On April 19, 1993, the ILWU and Locals 13 and 63 amended their charge. On April 7, 1994, the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Local 63, Office Clerical Unit (Local 63 OCU and collectively with the ILWU, Local 13 and Local 63, the Unions or the Charging Parties) filed a charge with Region 21 docketed as Case 21-CA-30003 against Respondent. On September 29, 1994, the Unions filed a charge docketed as Case 21-CA-30299 against Respondent and amended the charge on December 14, 1994.

On May 27, 1994, the Regional Director for Region 21 issued an order consolidating cases, consolidated complaint, and notice of hearing consolidating Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. Respondent filed an answer to the consolidated complaint dated June 10, 1994. The complaint and the answer were each further amended at the September 26, 1994 hearing. On September 26 through 29, 1994, hearings were held respecting Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003.

On November 25, 1994, the Regional Director for Region 21 issued a complaint respecting Case 21-CA-30299. The complaint alleges some of the same violations of the Act as the consolidated complaint respecting Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003¹ (the earlier complaint) with the additional allegations that Respondent terminated three employees in late September and early October 1994 because of their union activities in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act and changed work rules of unit employees without bargaining with the Unions in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

On December 12, 1994, the General Counsel filed a motion to consolidate the complaint with the case then-pending decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. I granted the motion by Order dated January 3, 1995.

The reopened hearing on the consolidated complaints was held on January 30, 1995. At that hearing counsel for Charging Party Local OCU moved that the cases be severed to expedite the issuance of the decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. The General Counsel, with the concurrence of the other parties, took the position that, if the severance motion were granted, the existing record to that date respecting Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 should be made a part of the litigation of the complaint in Case 21-CA-30299.

¹The complaint in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 alleged that Respondent is a successor employer with respect to two bargaining units represented by the Unions and that Respondent wrongfully failed and refused to hire the predecessor employer's unit employees in violation of Sec. 8(a)(3) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act. The complaint further alleged that Respondent had a bargaining obligation with respect to employees in the two units and violated its duty to recognize and bargain with the Union in violation of Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act in the following ways: (1) by failing to recognize and bargain with the Unions as representatives of its unit employees; (2) in initially establishing its unit employees' terms and conditions of employment without bargaining with the Unions; and (3) by failing to bargain with the Unions respecting changes from the predecessor's terms and conditions of employment.

On February 14, 1995, I issued an Order Granting Motion Severing Case 21-CA-30299 and Decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 (JD(SF)-25-95), which severed Case 21-CA-30299 from Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, decided the latter two cases, and further held that Case 21-CA-30299 would remain before me for decision following receipt of briefs based on a record including the record and decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003.

On the entire record as described above, including the demeanor of the witnesses, and helpful briefs from the General Counsel and Respondent, I make the following ²

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

At all times since April 1, 1994, Respondent, a New York corporation with an office and place of business in Compton, California, has been engaged in the operation of a container freight station providing warehousing and interstate and foreign shipment of cargo pursuant to a contract with the United States Army respecting its 1312 Medium Port Command (the army terminal). Based on a projection of its operations, Respondent's operation of the terminal will annually derive revenues in excess of $50,000 for the warehousing and transportation of freight in interstate and foreign commerce, under arrangements with various common carriers, each of which operates between California and various other States of the United States or between California and foreign countries. Based on those projections, Respondent will annually perform services valued in excess of $50,000 for the United States Army, an enterprise directly engaged in interstate commerce. Based on its operations Respondent will function as an essential link in the transportation of freight in interstate and foreign commerce.

Based on the above I find that Respondent at all times material has been an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

The Unions are and each of them is, labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Previous Findings

In my decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, I found that Respondent had improperly failed to hire the employees of and was a successor to Maersk Pacific Limited respecting the operation of the contained freight station of the 1312 Medium Port Command of the United States Army. I held further that Respondent was obligated to hire the pre-²When not otherwise noted, the findings are based on the underlying record and decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and the pleadings, stipulations of counsel, or unchallenged credible evidence in the instant case.

The findings and conclusions earlier made in my decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, to the extent they are a necessary part of my findings and conclusions, are set forth here only in summary form without an attempt to recapitulate the basis for those findings. The decision, and the record underlying it, as discussed above, is a part of the record in the instant case.

cessor's employees and obligated to recognize and bargain with the Unions respecting the units described below:

The longshore and marine clerk unit represented by the Longshore Locals:

All longshoremen and marine clerks employed by Respondent at 1312 Medium Post Command located at 1620 South Wilmington, Compton, California, excluding all other employees, professional employees, management employees, temporary management employees, trainees, confidential salesmen, guards, watchmen, and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

The office clerical unit or OCU represented by Local OCU:

All office clerical employees employed by Respondent at 1312 Medium Post Command located at 1620 South Wilmington, Compton, California, excluding all other employees, professional employees, management employees, temporary management employees, trainees, confidential employees, salesmen, guards, watchmen, and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

I further found that the bargaining obligation arose before Respondent hired employees and, therefore, Respondent was obligated from the very beginning of its hiring to bargain with the Unions before changing any of the existing (i.e., Maersk), terms and conditions of employment.

Because Respondent had changed certain of the unit employees' terms and conditions of employment including work rules and procedures as well as jurisdictional delineations without bargaining with the Unions, I directed that Respondent restore the status quo ante respecting the bargaining units and thereafter change those unit terms and conditions only after notification and bargaining with the Unions.

B. Subsequent Events

1. The Federal district court preliminary injunction

On August 22, 1994, Federal District Court Judge A. Wallace Tashima issued an order granting preliminary injunction³ in an action brought by the Regional Director against Respondent pursuant to Section 10(j) of the Act in connection with the complaint in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. The order directed Respondent, pending final disposition of the unfair labor practice allegations, inter alia, to offer full and immediate reinstatement to the former employees of Maersk to their former positions displacing any persons hired as their replacements, to restore the wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment of the employees employed by Maersk in the appropriate units and to recognize and bargain with the Unions representing the two units.⁴

³ Docket 94-5196 AWT (Ctx).

Representatives of the Unions and Respondent met respecting the court's order in September 1994. The Unions sought reinstatement of all the Maersk employees to their former positions with the same terms and conditions of employment that had then obtained including the various contractual and other jurisdictional distinctions in job duties and responsibilities applicable to the three types of employee: longshoreman, marine clerks, and office clerical. Respondent took the position that employment would be offered only to those individuals who were needed under Respondent's consolidated operations and that past practices of Maersk including those respecting maintenance of traditional jurisdictional lines between the various types of employees would not be restored.

On September 21, and thereafter because of availability problems associated with the September trial proceedings in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, eight former Maersk employees were employed by Respondent. Not all former employees of Maersk who sought reinstatement were employed nor were all replacement employees displaced. The three individuals alleged in the instant complaint as discriminatees were part of this group. Despite the Union agents' protestations, Respondent did not restore the status quo ante with respect to these employee's working conditions including the jurisdictional distinctions between and among longshoremen, marine clerks, and office clerical employees either before or during the employment of the three.

2. The employment and discharge of Larry E. Taylor

Larry E. Taylor had worked at the army terminal for the various stevedoring contractors since about 1970 as a marine clerk. He testified his job was basically to supervise paper-work flow and the "warehouse situation" respecting loading and shipping of containers. Taylor testified that he went to work for Respondent on September 21, 1994, and was the only marine clerk at that time hired by Respondent from among the former Maersk employees.

Taylor was informed at the commencement of his employment by Respondent's project manager and highest onsite supervisor, James Moynihan, that although Taylor had done the work for many years one way, he was to learn to do it the way he was directed by Respondent's agents.

Taylor testified that Respondent did in fact do things differently than he had experienced with Maersk under the collective-bargaining agreement. More particularly, the duties of longshoremen and marine clerks were not separately maintained. Rather duties were organized in different ways with employees doing some tasks that were previously longshore unit work and other tasks that were previously marine clerk unit work.

Taylor testified to a variety of work situations in which, because of the different organization of work, he was called on to process papers respecting freight he had not directly tracked with the consequence that he was unable to correct errors that had occurred in freight disposition. James Moynihan testified that a series of freight handling mistakes centered around Taylor in the days following his employment. Moynihan testified that he worked with Taylor to adjust procedures to insure such mistakes did not continue, but was unable to prevent their continuing occurrence. Moynihan testified that he came to the final conclusion that Taylor was simply sabotaging the job and, on October 3, 1994, terminated him.

Respondent that not all the former Maersk positions would have been available regardless of any unfair labor practices committed.

3. The employment and discharge of Tommie Nunez

Tommie Nunez had worked at the army terminal for many years under Maersk and earlier contractors as a longshoreman. He testified his duties with Maersk were as a "dock utility" longshoreman stuffing and unstuffing containers, handling the privately owned vehicles (POVOs) being shipped, and running associated equipment to accomplish these tasks.

Nunez reported to work with Respondent on September 21, 1994. He testified that he was aware of the court's order and believed he was "supposed to go back to work the way it was." During the next few days he was assigned both traditional longshore work and other work, which under the collective-bargaining agreements would be marine clerks' work. He further testified that the working conditions and rules followed at Maersk were not followed under Respondent. Thus, for example, whereas at Maersk a pair of longshoremen might undertake to stuff a container, under Respondent he was assigned such duties alone.

On Tuesday, September 27, 1994, Nunez was loading and unloading back containers of POV's. In the afternoon he had difficulty with a vehicle that had a dead battery with a broken battery post. Unable to start the vehicle, Nunez testified he requested help to remove the vehicle from the container. In time he was assigned someone to help him but, not recognizing the individual as a former Maersk longshoreman nor as an employee dispatched from the union hiring hall and, he testified, therefore not having confidence in the employee's ability to work safely with him, Nunez refused to work with the individual. Moynihan was summoned and the problem reviewed. Moynihan directed Nunez to work with the assigned employee. Nunez refused and was fired.

4. The employment and discharge of Fred Williamson

Fred Williamson had been a longtime army terminal employee who worked for Maersk as a marine clerk with the further classification of chief truck delivery, receiving, and delivery clerk. Williamson reported for work at Respondent on September 26, 1994. Williamson testified that Moynihan directed him to an individual not known to him but identified by another witness as Bill Christe, a non-Maersk Respondent employee, for instruction. Williamson went to Christe and told him he would not take instruction from him because Christe was not his "boss." Christe reported to Moynihan who came over and asked Williamson if he was refusing to work. Williamson indicated he was not refusing to work, but that Christe was not his boss.

Following a brief assignment respecting the filing of keys, Williamson was told by Christe that he was to receive trucks and that he would show Williamson how to do it. Williamson testified he replied, "You ain't going to show me nothing." Thereafter Christe went to Moynihan and, in essence the earlier colloquy with Moynihan was repeated with Williamson finally acceding to the assignment.

Williamson testified that he had been at his assigned task for under 2 hours when Moynihan asked him how long he was going to take to finish. Williamson demurred indicating he would be done as soon as he could. Williamson recalled the question and answer were repeated and thereafter Moynihan told him he was fired.

Moynihan testified that Williamson from the time he showed up on the job was uncooperative, insolent, and in essence trying to sabotage the job. Moynihan noted that Williamson had refused to cooperate with Christe, been away from his work assignment location, and been insolently slow in the completion of assigned tasks. Moynihan testified that he confronted Williamson when he was going very slowly through his task of checking out cars and asked when the job would be done. When Williamson repeatedly refused to suggest when he would complete his assigned tasks, Moynihan fired him. Moynihan made it clear that in his view Williamson was simply baiting him throughout the day.

C. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Duplicate allegations sustained in the complaint in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003

The instant complaint duplicates allegations contained in the earlier complaint in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. To the extent that these allegations have been sustained in the earlier matter and no change in the conduct found violative was presented in the instant case, they will not be sustained a second time. There is no basis for finding a further violation of the Act, if the conduct in the instant case is in effect a continuation of conduct found violative in the earlier decision and is therefore fully remedied therein.

Thus, for example, the instant complaint alleges at paragraph 13(a) that Respondent at all times since April 1, 1994, implemented work rules and procedures and imposed terms and conditions of employment on the employees in the bargaining units, which were different from those that existed prior to April 1, 1994. Complaint paragraph 13(d) alleges these matters are mandatory subjects of bargaining and complaint paragraph 13(e) alleges that this was done without prior notice to the Unions and without affording the Unions an opportunity to bargain with Respondent respecting the conduct and its effect. Complaint paragraph 14 alleges this conduct to be violative of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act. All these allegations have been sustained in the prior proceeding and a remedy directed. The parties stipulated that Respondent has simply continued during the period relevant the same conduct found violative in the earlier case.

Respecting those "repeated" alleged violations, I here dismiss them as repetitive of the earlier allegations in the prior case and fully dealt with in the decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. The "new" allegations not here dismissed address the September and October 1994 terminations of three individuals: Larry Taylor, Tommy Nunez, and Fred Williamson.

2. New complaint allegations

a. The complaint language

Complaint subparagraphs 12(a), (b), and (c) allege that Respondent terminated Taylor, Nunez, and Williamson respectively. Complaint subparagraph 12(d) alleges the terminations were because the employees assisted the Unions and engaged in concerted activities, and to discourage employees from engaging in such activities. Paragraph 15 of the complaint alleges that the conduct set forth in paragraph 12 is discrimination in regard to the hire or tenure or terms and conditions of employment of its employees, thereby discouraging membership in a labor organization in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

Subparagraphs 13(b), (c), and (e) of the complaint allege:

(b) Since their reinstatements . . . until they were terminated . . . Williamson, Nunez and Taylor were assigned work duties outside their traditional unit jurisdiction, and were subjected to wages, hours and terms and conditions of employment different from those of Maersk.

(c) Respondent terminated Williamson, Nunez and Taylor for violation of work rules and procedures which were different from the work rules and procedures which had existed prior to April 1, 1994.

(e) Respondent engaged in the conduct described above in paragraphs 12(a) through 12 (c) and 13 (a) through 13(c), without prior notice to the Unions and without affording the Unions an opportunity to bargain with Respondent with respect to this conduct and the effects of this conduct.

Paragraph 14 of the complaint alleges, inter alia, that Respondent's actions alleged in paragraphs 12(a) through (c) and 13(b) through (c) and 13(e) are violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act. Paragraph 16 of the complaint alleges the same conduct as violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

b. The arguments of the parties

The General Counsel argues on brief that Williamson, Nunez, and Taylor were confronted with a "New Breed way" that was far different from what they had experienced under Maersk's pre-April 1, 1994 working conditions, was far different from the working conditions that Respondent was obligated to apply to them as found in the decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and was far different from what their Union and they had expected when they commenced employment. The General Counsel argues that this failure to restore the status quo ante was the cause of the discharge of each employee. Citing cases for the proposition that employees who lose their jobs pursuant to illegally instituted working conditions are improperly discharged, the General Counsel argues in effect that Respondent could not discharge the three employees for violating unilaterally adopted work and jurisdiction rules or for refusing to abide by such illegal rules. The General Counsel further argues that the three employees are also entitled to an offer of reinstatement and backpay under the decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003.

Respondent on brief argues that the three were terminated for poor performance and insubordination free from any impermissible motives and therefore Respondent did not violate the Act in any way. Further, Respondent argues that if any of the three were unhappy with their working circumstances they "could have worked under protest and subsequently grieved Moynihan's instructions," Respondent's brief at footnote 3, page 8.

c. Analysis and conclusions respecting the discharges

(1) An initial caveat

In my view the instant case has been somewhat confused as a result of its consolidation with and subsequent severance from Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 after those cases had been tried, but before a decision respecting them had issued. At the outset of the analysis it is important to note what is and is not at issue in the instant case as opposed to the earlier case. First, as noted above, although the instant case is not a simple repetition of the complaint allegations in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, to the extent it does repeat allegations earlier litigated and decided, those repeated allegations are not considered anew, but have been dismissed, above. Second, the instant case is not the compliance stage of the earlier case. That is, a subsequent unfair labor practice complaint and hearing is not the normal means or forum for deciding whether discriminatees are entitled to offers of reinstatement under a remedy directed in an earlier case. More specifically, addressing the three individuals at issue, who were ordered hired by Respondent in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, such issues are normally litigated, if then ripe, when Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 are in the compliance stage.

(2) The alternative discharge theories of the General Counsel

(a) The antiunion animus motive theory

The General Counsel has, in essence, two theories of discharge that must be separately considered. The first, alleged in complaint subparagraph 12(d), is that the three individuals were discharged by Respondent out of an antiunion, antiprotected activity, or retaliatory motive. This is a traditional factual issue.

The General Counsel relies on the animus implicit in the violations earlier found, in Respondent's refusal either to hire all the Maersk employees or to restore the status quo ante particularly respecting preservation of the work or jurisdictional distinctions clearly of concern to the Unions and the individuals at issue and in Respondent's agents' reactions to the actions of the three individuals.

Respondent's agent Moynihan denied his actions in terminating any of the three were so motivated. I discredited Moynihan in the earlier case. I credit him here based on his demeanor as well as a consideration of the probabilities and the record as a whole including the earlier record as noted above. I believe that he did not fire Williamson, Nunez, or Taylor for such reasons. From Moynihan's point of view, based on his credited testimony, the conduct of the three was inadequate and merited discharge. There is no evidence that higher-ups within Respondent's organization caused these discharges for antiunion reasons. Accordingly, I find the General Counsel's traditional animus theory of illegal discharge is not sustained by the facts.

(b) The discharges as a consequence of illegal working conditions theory

The General Counsel's latter theory, as explicated on brief and described briefly above, is grounded in the line of Board cases that hold that if an employee is discharged from failing to conform to rules or working conditions, which are themselves illegally imposed, the discharge is also improper.

The General Counsel's theory as applied to the instant case is that Respondent was obligated to restore Williamson, Nunez, and Taylor to the working conditions they enjoyed under Maersk and, when Respondent admittedly failed to do so, it could not properly fire them for their failure to comply with the illegal working conditions that were in fact applied to them. As a matter of law, argues the General Counsel, Respondent violated the Act in terminating them for their refusals to acquiesce in the illegal working conditions.

The error in the General Counsel's approach to the terminations under this theory, in my view, is that it presupposes that for the purposes of deciding this case, Respondent was obligated to restore the working conditions of the three former Maersk unit employees at issue. That is, of course, true under my decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and would be true, if the instant case were in the compliance stage of that earlier case considering if the three were reinstated consistent with the Order in that case.

As noted several times, above, however, Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 are independent of the instant case and I shall not herein direct or find what has been found previously. I have ruled that the aspects of the instant complaint that repeat allegations in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 or that would be properly part of the compliance stage of that case will not be found violative herein. And, to the extent such theories are raised anew herein, they will be dismissed.

Given that holding, the General Counsel's argued obligation of Respondent to restore the status quo ante with respect to Williamson, Nunez, and Taylor may not rely on the obligations declared in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003—those obligations will be determined and applied in that case independent of the instant case. Nor may the General Counsel rely on the Federal court's order, quoted above, to impose such an obligation even though the record suggests that order was the basis for the reinstatement of the three employees at issue herein and others. That is so because the Federal district court's order does not create rights or obligations enforced by administrative law judges under the Act.

Lacking these two bases for arguing in the instant case that Respondent was obligated to restore the status quo ante to Williamson, Nunez, and Taylor, and no other basis being arguable on this record, the General Counsel's theory that Respondent's terminations were illegal as part of an illegal application of working conditions—insofar as the matter is independent of the violations found in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 must fail. I shall therefore dismiss the discharge allegations respecting Williamson, Taylor, and Nunez.

In essence what I have determined in dismissing the complaint in its entirety is that the matters in issue are fully and properly covered in the independent proceeding in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. Respondent has been found to have illegally failed to hire the three individuals in contest in April 1994 in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, and has also been found to have failed to recognize and bargain with the Unions and to have failed to restore the status quo ante respecting those employees. The record suggests that Respondent has simply continued to refuse to change those working conditions.

Given all the above, it is not necessary to find that Respondent's continuing failures under Section 8(a)(5) of the Act are new violations. There is nothing that could be directed herein that has not been directed in the Order in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. Respecting the hire and virtually immediate discharge of the three former Maersk employees at issue, the Order in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 directs they be employed under status quo ante conditions. My findings indicate I believe the question of whether Respondent properly met the terms of the earlier Order or whether the conduct of these individuals precludes the necessity of Respondent now offering them employment should be litigated as part of the compliance stage of Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and not as a separate, free standing unfair labor practice complaint. If Respondent's conduct was improper, I believe the consequences will be properly adjusted in that compliance stage and not in a new unfair labor practice finding and remedial Order. More simply put, I have dismissed the complaint in this case because I believe it adds nothing to what has been found or may be resolved in the compliance stage of Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003.

It may be that I have discretion to, in effect, repeat findings made in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and sustain the General Counsel's complaint in the instant case. If that is so, I specifically exercise my discretion not to do so, but rather reaffirm the result reached above. This is so because it seems to me to be bad policy to put into a second, independent unfair labor practice decision findings, conclusions, and an order that contribute nothing to remedying the situation litigated in the earlier case or within the scope of the earlier cases' compliance procedures, but which decision is totally dependent on that earlier case for its validity. If all the unfair labor practices and compliance matters respecting the three individuals and Respondent's obligations under Section 8(a)(5) of the Act are dealt with exclusively in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, any modification in the holding by reviewing authority resolves the entire matter. If the matters are needlessly split between two independent cases, the consequences of any modification by reviewing authority of the Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 will not be immediately addressed by that authority and additional actions will have to be taken by the parties or reviewing authority to bring the two cases into harmony. Far better in my judgment, when no substantive harm or procedural impediment exists, to keep the entire controversy in one proceeding. Given this view, even were it possible to, in effect, split the remedial Order directed to Respondent into two proceedings, I would decline to do so.

3. Summary of findings respecting complaint allegations

I have found that the instant complaint, to the extent it simply recapitulates allegations previously sustained in the decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, is redundant and unnecessary. Those duplicative allegations have been dismissed on that ground. Similarly, I have found that the allegations of violations of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act respecting the events occurring after April 1, 1994—including the circumstances of the hiring of the three individuals in questions herein—are sufficiently covered by the Decision and Order in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and are properly dismissed.

Respecting the discharge allegations contending violations of Section 8(a)(3), (5), and (1) of the Act, I have found that Respondent did not discharge the three individuals out of antiunion or antiprotected activity animus. I have also found that the General Counsel's theory of a violation in the instant case, unlike the compliance stage of the decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, may not assume, predicated on the findings in that case, that Respondent was obligated to establish the status quo ante respecting unit working conditions and that, having failed to do so, could not discharge employees for refusing to comply with the new working conditions. Having made this finding, I further found that there is no evidence that Respondent terminated the three in violation of the Act. I therefore dismissed the discharge allegations of the complaint.

IV. FURTHER FINDINGS RESPECTING THE DISCHARGES

The procedural development of this case in respect to the initial litigation of Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, the subsequent consolidation of the instant case, the issuance of a decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and, finally, a decision in the instant case is unusual. The case is also unusual because of the existence of a judicial order, the parties dealing with that order and the reinstatements that were generated by it.

I have ruled that the instant case must be treated as separate and apart from the decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and that the violations found therein will not be simply repeated. I extended that distinction to matters that are in my view a proper part of the compliance stage of Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. Thus, I have dealt with the discharges of Williamson, Nunez, and Taylor only as a separate, independent, free standing violations of the Act and not as reinstatement issues as would be handled in the compliance stage of Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003. In that context I have found no violations of the Act in Respondent's termination of the three.

Although I hope I have made clear the distinctions described above, in order to avoid misunderstandings of the parties respecting how the events should be viewed in the compliance stage of Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, I make the following further conditional findings in that compliance context and not as part of my analysis of the unfair labor practice complaint allegations, above.⁵

A. First conditional compliance finding in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003

As a compliance matter in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 Respondent was obligated to offer Maersk unit employees reinstatement to positions to which Maersk terms and conditions of employment were applied. These conditions include the existing jurisdictional and other work rules. Respondent admittedly did not do so regarding Nunez, Williamson, and Taylor and no suggestion was made or could be supported on this record that the Union or the employees waived their rights to obtain the benefits of that Order's provision. Accordingly, I find that Respondent did not offer reinstatement as required by the Order in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 to Williamson, Nunez, and Taylor in September and October 1994.

B. Second conditional compliance finding in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003

Further, I find as a compliance matter in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 that in as much as the Union, Williamson, Taylor, and Nunez all believed that, consistent with the court's order, Respondent was in fact going to apply the status quo ante to the positions accepted by Williamson, Taylor, and Nunez, that a fundamental mutual mistake occurred in the abortive employment relationships created when Respondent hired Williamson, Nunez, and Taylor in September and October 1994 but did not in fact restore the status quo ante as they expected. I find that those employment relationships, in essence, ended as a result of that misunderstanding between the parties and may be regarded for purposes of evaluating Respondent's subsequent obligations to Williamson, Nunez, and Taylor, as voluntary quits by the three. In effect I find that their conduct in refusing to conform to Respondent's new working conditions—which prompted their discharge—as justified and should not be used against them to deny them the continuing right to be offered employment as directed by the decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003.

C. Summary of additional findings

Having dismissed the complaint in its entirety in part because portions were already established in the decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 or properly part of the compliance stage of that proceeding, I made certain further findings respecting that compliance stage so as to avoid the possibility that the unfair labor practice findings in the instant case would be misinterpreted or misapplied in the compliance stage of Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 or that the Board would consolidate the instant case with Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003 and, desiring to address the compliance issue at that stage, remand the cases for further findings.

Addressing the implications of the discharges of Williamson, Taylor, and Nunez in the instant case on their rights to reinstatement and backpay in the compliance stage of Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003, I, in effect, declared "no harm, no foul." Thus, I found the hire and discharge of Williamson, Nunez, and Taylor in September 1994 was the result of a mutual mistake respecting the terms and conditions of employment that would apply to the three such that their discharges should be held equivalent to justifiable quits that would not detract from or constitute a waiver of their rights to any and all relief they would otherwise be entitled to under the decision in Cases 21-CA-29995 and 21-CA-30003.

On the basis of the above findings of fact and on the entire record, I make the following

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.
2. The Unions are, and each of them is, labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. Respondent did not violate the Act as alleged in the complaint.

On these findings of fact and conclusions of law and on the entire record, I issue the following recommended⁶

ORDER

The complaint shall be and it hereby is dismissed.

⁶If no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules, be adopted by the Board and all objections to them shall be waived for all purposes.
