H-2B (Visa)

The purpose of H-2B visas is to allow temporary foreign workers in non-agricultural and non-mining industries to work in the United States. These visas are used for workers who possess special skills or abilities that cannot be performed by US workers because of the prevailing economic conditions in the industry. H-2B visas are approved for a maximum of three years, with the possibility of renewal.

H-2B visas are subject to availability limits. The number of H-2B visas issued each year is determined by law. The law sets a cap on the number of H-2B visas that can be issued each year, and this cap is adjusted based on the prevailing labor market conditions.

- The H-2B visa program was established in 1989 under the Immigration Reform and Control Act.
- The program allows employers in industries that are unable to find qualified US workers to recruit foreign workers for temporary non-agricultural and non-mining jobs.
- H-2B visas are available to workers from any country, as long as they have the required qualifications and skills.
- H-2B workers are subject to the same employment and work requirements as other non-immigrant visa holders.
- H-2B workers are not eligible for permanent residency or citizenship.

The H-2B visa program is a temporary solution to the shortage of skilled workers in certain industries. It allows employers to bring in workers from other countries to fill positions where US workers are not available, thereby helping to meet the labor needs of these industries.

In conclusion, the H-2B visa program is a valuable tool for employers in industries with labor shortages. It allows for the temporary recruitment of foreign workers to fill positions where US workers are not available, thereby helping to meet the labor needs of these industries.
B. Immigrants to Be Used to Create a New Administrative System

Immigrants with this capacity and dedication have the potential to create a wholly new administrative system. This new system could be built on the foundation of NLRB, ICE, and CBP.
